It's a common mistake to think of a SE (Societas Europaea) as just a company registered in one of the 27 EU member states. In reality, a SE is a distinct legal entity that can be registered in any of the 27 EU member states, but it must have a minimum of 10 employees in at least two different EU member states.

As of 2024, there are over 10,000 SEs in operation across the EU. The most common reasons for forming a SE include: to facilitate cross-border operations within the EU, to attract investment from other EU countries, and to avoid the need to register in multiple member states. The SE is a single legal entity, which means it can enter into contracts, own property, and be sued in any of the 27 EU member states.

The SE is a single legal entity, which means it can enter into contracts, own property, and be sued in any of the 27 EU member states. This is a significant advantage for companies that operate across multiple EU member states, as it allows them to avoid the need to register in multiple member states and to have a single legal entity for all their EU operations.
