When is the roll-over procedure for Forex? It is a procedure for converting the value of foreign currencies (Forex) into a common unit of value, such as the US Dollar. This is done by dividing the value of the foreign currency by the current exchange rate of that currency against the US Dollar. For example, if the exchange rate of the US Dollar against the Brazilian Real is 1:6, then the value of 100 Brazilian Reals would be converted to 16.67 US Dollars.

The roll-over rate is the interest rate charged or credited on the trade when it is held overnight. This rate is determined by the central bank of the country whose currency is being traded. For example, if the central bank of the US has a target rate of 2.5%, then the roll-over rate for a trade in US Dollars would be 2.5%.

It is important to note that the roll-over rate can be either positive or negative. If the roll-over rate is positive, it means that the trader will receive interest on the trade. If the roll-over rate is negative, it means that the trader will pay interest on the trade.

Therefore, it is important for traders to be aware of the roll-over rate when they are trading Forex. This will help them to calculate the cost of holding a trade overnight and to make more informed trading decisions.
