Commercial and industrial rivalry is a form of rivalry that occurs between organizations, companies, or industries. It is characterized by competition for resources, market share, and customer loyalty. Rivalry can be both positive and negative, depending on the context and the participants involved. It can drive innovation and growth, but it can also lead to unethical behavior and conflict.

Just three forms of rivalry capture the dynamics of these processes: developing potential customers, capturing rivals' customers and competing for sales to shared customers. The Dynamics of Rivalry: free assets : DynamicsOfRivalry
